G Department of Psychology), in which he informed audience about the upcoming events of the week like Counselling Session, easy competition, Photography competition and community visit etc. He introduced the event for the day by mentioning the hard work and enthusiasm of his team and college on the face of this global emergency.

A formal welcome to the honourable guest was given by the principal Prof. Mohammad Maqbool Rather, who discussed the journey and achievements of the esteemed guest Dr Abdul Majeed Ganai, mentioning his roles as a teacher, researcher and a medical professional. The guest speaker was introduced by Dr. Navshad Ahmad Wani and he handed over the podium to the guest. Dr. Ganai, who started his lecture on mental health issues, introducing mental health definition to the audience. He put forth the thought that human body is the best machine in the world, highlighting the creator's bestowing us with two pillars of energy i.e. positive and negative. It is the human capacity to work wisely on positive aspects while ignoring the negative one.

Dr Abdul Majeed Ganai was of the opinion that the best reward to human psyche is when a person removes suffering from another person. In present scenario of pandemic he found deficiency of psychiatrists and countries left with limited resources. So he suggested a rescue in the form of community intervention, which he called are golden times to recover one's community. Community intervention comprise simply of ABCD model where A stand for Awareness, which helps to fear psychosis to go; B stands for Basics ( we don't need to know the details of virus it makes us worry more); C stands for Commuter's Concern; D stands for Do something. A simple magic rule given by our guest to avoid Covid19 was as follows :

Make social Distancing

Mask your eyes, mouth and nose properly.

He emphasised upon faith healing, as in today's crisis where technology and man power seems tiny as a development, faith played great role in boosting immunity. A message of joining hands and working together were the concluding remarks of the guest's lecture.

The outbreak of pneumonia epidemic caused by the 2019 novel coronavirus (2019-nCoV, later named SARS-CoV-2; Chen et al., 2019) in Wuhan, Hubei, China, in December 2019, and was recognised as a global pandemic by the World Health Organization (WHO) on March 11, 2020. There is ample evidence suggesting that stressful events, such as SARS-CoV-2 can have debilitating effects on individuals' psychological and physical well-being. Thus, the World Health Organization has issued guidelines for managing the problem from both biomedical and psychological points of view.

Given the quantum and breadth of impact of the SARS-CoV-2, we do not think there is a single human being who is not affected or feeling some degree of stress and anxiety. The intensity and impact may vary from person to person, however.

Nervousness, fears of contamination, constant reassurance seeking behaviors, panic attacks, sleep disturbance, excessive worry and feelings of helplessness, probability of an economic slowdown, potential job losses, financial burden, uncertainty about future possibilities, fears of running out of food and other necessities etc., are some major triggering factors to depression and anxiety and further worsening depression may lead to severe mental health issues and suicidal thoughts.
